The Federal Reserve Board's latest report discloses that farm assets increased 9 per cent during 1958 for a record high. The dollar increase was from $186 billion to $203 billion. Subtracting debts leaves an increase in farmers' equities from $166 billion to $180 billion.

Too, more and more land is being taken out of cultivation by expanding cities, by highway construction, and for lakes and other conservation efforts.

All these combine to force the price of farm land higher in many areas than would be indicated in terms of its potential earning power. But even those buying land and making payments out of proportion to the anticipated income from the land seldom worry.

anti-Communists there is always a little feud as to who is more anti-Communistic than the others and which one was first inc discovering the grand conspiracy and who is absolutely pure and sincere in his opposition. and who understands strategy

The current quarrel is over a book by Harry and Bonaro Overstreet on "What We Must Know About Communism." To anti-Communists, the Overstreets are converted Liberals who belatedly discovered the truth. Precisely what difference the latness or earliness of the discovery makes is a bit difficult to understand. It seems to me that the return of a Prodegal is a great gain and no one can deny that the contributions of Whittaker Chambers or Arthur Koestler to the fight on Marxism have been as great and as sacrificial as anybody's.

When the Overstreet book appeared, I praised it because it is competently written and will serve to reach a class of Americans who distrust many of those whom they describe as reactionaries. Some anti-Communists have been so stodgily fanatical that they have been rejected by those whom they must wish to reach, namely, the youth of this country. And if that is not their purpose, what is their purpose?

There is a point to be made about book-reviewing. Assuming that a man's mind and ideas and experience grow, there is no advantage in starting to review one book and then saying, "Hark! But he said something quite different five or ten years ago." Suppose he did, let's thank the Lord for belated wisdom!

The "National Review" takes the position that it is an exaggeration to say that the Overstreet book is the best that has been written against Communism from the Liberal point of

In repeat that in my personal experience since 1917, I find that the most competent and hardhitting fighters against Communism have been those who were either in that movement or close to it. They know where the soft spots really are.

The Bolsheviks represented a tiny fraction so that when they left the Tauride Palace, their absence was not notable in terms of vacant seats; it was notable because they were all gone. They acted as a unit. The vast majority was divided like a French government.

True, the anti-Communists are individualists who refuse to accept the kind of discipline and regimentation that the Communists willingly accept. But that does not mean that it is sensible to quarrel over someone else's presentation of opposition in some other way.

In repeat that in my personal experience since 1917, I find that the most competent and hardhitting fighters against Communism have been those who were either in that movement or close to it. They know where the soft spots really are.

From this standpoint, I recommend the Overstreet book to that public which wishes to have a Liberal's view of a movement which in 40 years has encompassed so large a territory and so many people.

POST OFFICE OF THE FUTURE -- Communications space stations of this type, based on actual plans developed by engineers of RCA's astro-electronic products division in Princeton, N. J., may become future "orbital post offices," relaying messages around the world by microwave radio. A network of three or four identical manned space stations, fixed permanently at points about 22,000 miles above the equator, ultimately may link all the world's major cities with live television and microwave radio communication. The vehicle would be designed to rotate slowly about its axis to maintain stability and to provide artificial gravity. It would move in its orbit at the same speed as the earth's rotation. The judge said she guessed the men on the fair board didn't realize how much work it took to grow flowers and how much time was spent arranging them, "Just," she said, "To bring them in here and have them cooked."

We talked with the judge about flowers fading at a flower show. The same flowers that will stay fresh three or four days in your home will fade after a couple of hours at a show.

The judge says it's a mystery but it has happened to her at the state fair where she shows every year. "Zinnias", she said, "are very unpredictable. Balsam The Red Rose Feed Co. planted (touch-me-nots) never hold up."

Frank McVicker Grows Huge GARDEN Variety of Daylilies Here

The Frank McVicker place four miles west of Williamsport on Route 22 is afire with daylilies now. McVicker is a hybridizer with literally thousands of seedlings to his credit.

Two of his seedlings have been accepted by the American Hermeracallis Society, are named and on the market. One variety, "Emily" is available for buying at $3 a clump right there at the McVicker home.

Emily's a darling. It's color is purest chrome yellow. It has an exceptional texture. The flower is very reflexed, not large but very beautiful. It is said to glow beautifully when growing in front of evergreens. Emily also has proliferations frequently which will produce another plant.

"Full Reward" is the other named McVicker daylily on the market. It is a big orange daylily and very handsome. It's price has not reached the average gardener level as yet.

BUT WHAT may interest Pickaway County gardeners is that Mc-Vicker is selling off many of his seedlings. They are different pric-The Columbus Park of Roses es but some are unbelievable bargains and equally as beautiful as named varieties. We bought several clumbs for 10 cents.

Police were called in, Slenkamp said, after an assistant store manager, a former Dayton resident, became suspicious. He found the ert Sir bank and address given by Brown to be fictitious. The chief said Brown had walked away from the Junction City Prison Farm in Perry County July 10. Sentenced from Montgomery County, Brown had served all but five months of a five-year term for passing $1,700 in worthless checks when he escaped.

Slenkamp said the convict also passed the checks in Pittsburgh Waynesburg, Pa., and eastern Ohio after his escape. Brown will be turned over to Pittsburgh police today, he added.
